

Upper 4 Geography fieldwork

Upper 4 geographers have recently been studying rivers and hydrology. They became hydrologists for their geography lessons and considered how different soil types affect rates of infiltration and therefore the likelihood of flooding.

Making the most of the sunshine, they used the school site to collect primary data on infiltration capacity. A welcome break to get outside and carry out fieldwork once more.

Mrs Colette McDermott