

Mutual respect & individual liberty

Continuing our learning about 'British Values', we are examining 'mutual respect' and 'individual liberty'. These two principles are core to the British way of life; they help ensure harmony within a modern, multicultural Britain. Mutual respect allows us to harness our diversity as a strength, while individual liberty affords us the ability to our own political, religious and cultural beliefs.

Pupils are asked to consider what mutual respect and individual liberty means to them and how we demonstrate these values in our day-to-day lives. They learn about the Magna Carta, which is widely considered to be a milestone in how we conceptualise our modern sense rights and liberties.

We then move to examine interesting legal cases from around the world which tease out how laws are designed to protect our human rights while balancing them against the rights of others.
