

Upper 6 sociologists prepare for final examinations

Our Upper 6 sociologists have completed their courses and are now busy revising the following topics; education, research methods, families and households, theories and crime. They have been completing practice questions, making mind maps, matching cards with theories and theorists on and trying our own version on the New York Times connections game to get them to consider the links between key concepts.

They have worked so hard for the last two years and we will really miss them. We wish them all the very best for their exams and their adventures afterwards. We look forward to hearing about their university studies, especially as two of them have chosen to continue to study sociology.
