

Lower 5 religious studies pupils consider how best to punish criminals

As part of their GCSE Religious Studies, Lower 5 have been researching and producing presentations on the advantages and disadvantages of different forms of punishment for criminals including prison, corporal punishment, victim-offender mediation and community service. They have considered what the aim of each of these punishments are and how effective they are at achieving these goals. Each pupil has concluded their presentation by making their case for whether they believe this punishment should form part of the UK's criminal justice system. The presentations have been extremely well researched and have resulted in some excellent class discussions afterwards.
