

Fire! Fire!

Transition had a wonderful workshop all about the Great Fire of London last Friday. The children began the day with a role-play activity to demonstrate how and why the fire spread so quickly. They then drew their own Tudor houses, using horizontal, vertical and diagonal lines to represent the wooden beams.

After lunch, the children used cereal boxes to create and paint their own Tudor houses and St Paul's Cathedral. We then joined the houses together to form a miniature version of London. Finally, we put on wellies and coats and headed to the bottom of the field to watch the fire spread. The children were thrilled to see a real fire moving through the houses and had fun putting the fire out too! What a fantastic day!
