

Upper 4 Spanish pupils create a drama about health

Upper 4 Spanish pupils have been learning how to talk about health ailments in Spanish, which can be very useful if they have to explain their symptoms whilst in a Spanish speaking country. They were asked to work in groups to devise a drama about a situation involving health symptoms.

This is an excellent way of not only practising current learning, but also incorporating language that they have learnt previously into a new context. We had patients, doctors, children, parents, friends and would-be romantic partners all acting in a variety of funny scenarios! I was very impressed with their language skills and creativity.
